Drive no faster than you can go without increasing the risk of an accident. Slow down to match your reaction time to conditions at intersections and stop signs, and be prepared to stop more quickly than you do now. It helps to have the right tools: a stopwatch, a watch, and a mobile phone. 2. Don't drink or drive. One drink can impair your judgment and lead to a crash. 3. Don't take shortcuts that could harm you or other drivers. Take the time to find the fastest route. Don't do things that cause you to be distracted, like talking on the phone or listening to music. Never text while driving. 4. Know your limits. You have a right to drive but you don't have a right to make it home. The limits on your age, experience, training, and equipment are based on sound research and scientific studies. If you have a new car, check the owner's manual. 5. Keep your car maintained. Let the mechanic check your tires, fluids, battery, and engine. Check the air in the tires yourself. Make sure you know what your oil needs before you need to change it. 6. Familiarize yourself with local laws and get an up-to-date driver's license. Pay attention to state, county, and local laws, which vary in many ways. Laws that vary by state include: some states have graduated driver's licensing laws, which set a driver's age limit and restrict the types of cars a young driver may operate. Check with your local traffic safety association or your local motor vehicle agency for information about local laws. 7. Get a good driver's education. Even when your child is over a certain age and has a good driving record, it's a good idea to take a good driver's education course to prepare him or her for driving. Many states offer driver improvement programs. 8. Educate your family and friends. Explain to them that teen driving is fun, but it also takes a lot of responsibility. 9. Take the time to check the rules for teen drivers. They vary in every state, county, and even city. Rules are set to give young drivers a chance to learn but to protect them from doing things that can harm themselves and others. Read the rules. They're there for a reason. 10. Understand that your teen cannot share the same car as you. Even if your teen has a good driving record, you can still be pulled over for speeding, running a stop sign, or driving a dangerous route. Make sure your teen knows how to drive.2nd Corps (United States) The 2nd Corps of the Union Army was a corps in the Army of the Potomac that saw
