Patients over the age of 65 have the highest probability of developing pressure ulcers. Approximately 50% of all hospitalizations of the elderly will result in pressure ulcer development. Most of these ulcers will occur on the sacrum, buttocks, heels and heels of the feet, which are the most vulnerable areas of the body. Typically, the development of pressure ulcers takes place over a 5- to 7-day period. Over that time, the incidence of ulcers increases from 4% to 7% for elderly nursing home residents and from 16% to 25% for hospitalized patients. There is increasing evidence that a subgroup of elderly patients are more susceptible to the development of pressure ulcers. Risk factors for pressure ulcers include an inability to walk or to move the joints, post-operative surgery, incontinence, immobility, malnutrition, neurologic disease, and paralysis. Most of these elderly patients will have some type of medical condition that diminishes their physical functions. Given these factors, it is not surprising that the incidence of pressure ulcers in the elderly increases in patients with these conditions. Pressure ulcers can develop on any part of the body except the palms of the hands and the soles of the feet. Once they have formed, pressure ulcers are slow to heal, lasting for weeks to months. Initially, the skin will develop a redness or blanching and then turn a dark, open sore. When the ulceration is penetrated, blisters may develop that ooze fluid. The average length of hospitalization for an ulcer patient is from seven to eleven days. The longer that a patient stays in the hospital, the higher is the probability that he or she will develop a pressure ulcer. Pressure ulcers can develop in a number of locations on the body. When pressure is applied to a body part for an extended period of time, the skin becomes weakened and more susceptible to trauma. Pressure ulcers develop when bony prominences such as the heels and sacrum are compressed over an extended period of time. Typically, pressure ulcers develop on the sacrum and heels. When skin and tissue are stretched, the blood supply to the area is reduced and leads to cell necrosis. With reduced blood flow, the skin and the tissue die, resulting in an ulcer.
